WORLD TRADE IN RED MEATS IN 1974

In 1974 world trade in red meats declined about 12 percent from 1973 levels. Most of the decline occurred in beef and veal trade. World pork trade was about the same as in 1973 but trade in sheepmeat declined by about 100,000 tons.

Beef and Veal

The 1974 reduction in beef and veal trade was caused primarily by entry restrictions in the European Community and Japan and also unattractive prices for boneless manufacturing beef in the United States. In the United States, the world's largest importer of beef and veal, imports dropped 19 percent to 747,000 tons. There were no restrictions on U.S. meat imports during 1974, with the exception of retaliatory quotas against Canada.

Unlike the United States, the European Community took a number of measures during early 1974 to reduce beef and veal imports and protect domestic cattle prices. These measures culminated in mid July with the EC announcement of a beef import embargo. Italy, prior to the EC embargo, had instituted advance deposit requirements of such magnitude as to virtually prohibit imports.

Japan ceased purchasing imported beef in February 1974. Only purchases that were contracted for prior to the announcement of the restrictions were permitted entry. As a consequence, Japan's 1974 beef and veal imports fell about 110,000 tons below 1973 entries.

Sheepmeat

World trade in sheepmeat in 1974 declined for the second consecutive year. In New Zealand, the world's largest exporter, both the lamb and mutton kill was down from the previous year's level owing to drought. About 85 percent of New Zealand's lamb exports (about 280,000 tons) in the early 1970's were to the United Kingdom. In 1974, higher freight costs, the increased duty on lamb imports, and relatively lower beef than lamb prices in the United Kingdom caused New Zealand's exports to the United Kingdom to fall to 197,000 tons.

Most of the decline in Australia's sheepmeat exports was due to their price support program for wool, along with low prices for mutton, which encouraged producers to withhold mutton ewes from the market, thus causing a sharp drop in supplies available for export.

Outlook For 1975

World trade in beef and veal will be smaller in 1975 than in 1974. The restrictive import policies adopted by the major importing countries in 1974 continued in 1975 and only at years' end showed an easing.

Some expansion in world pork trade is expected in 1975 with the removal of Japanese import duties. Some expansion in sheepmeat trade is also expected owing to a greater Japanese demand for mutton to substitute for reduced pork availabilities for sausage manufacture.

The USSR emerged as a significant purchaser of beef and veal in 1974; buying an estimated 290,000 tons in that year compared with about 16,000 tons the previous year. Of the 290,000 tons, Argentina supplied about 19,000 tons on a product weight basis; France, 71,000 tons; Ireland, 15,000 tons; and the Netherlands, 2,000 tons.

Pork

The European Community accounts for about 70 percent of world trade in pork. About 80 percent of this quantity is intratrade among the members themselves. Denmark, the Benelux countries, and Ireland are net exporters of pork while the United Kingdom, West Germany, and Italy are net importers.

Danish pork exports declined about 6 percent in 1974 to 508,000 tons. The most significant reduction was in exports of prepared and preserved pork products, which fell 7 percent to 175,000 tons, of which the U.S. took 61,000 tons (down 17 percent). High raw material prices and internal processing costs, lower EC export subsidies, slack U.S. demand, and stiff competition from Poland and Yugoslavia accounted for the reduction in Danish production and exports of canned and prepared meat products in 1974.

In the United Kingdom pork imports declined 10 percent to 494,000 metric tons. Virtually all of the United Kingdom's pork imports are bacon. Denmark is the largest supplier of this bacon. Reduced Danish production and more attractive prices for fresh pork in Germany caused Denmark's bacon exports to the United Kingdom to drop.
